

THE WORD

March 12th, 26
Issue 23 | 25-26

Well... we asked and boy did Mother Nature deliver!! Grateful to get this weeks storm in, even if it causes those slightly more memorable than needed drives up the pass... but would it be a true Stevens season with out at least one of those early morning “light speed style” adventures?

All that said, the end of the season is officially on the horizon. We still have so much to look forward to, but also just a few more items to stay on top of as we head into the final stretch.

Let’s finish as strong as this storm, keep spirits high, and cruise through the remaining five weeks of what’s shaping up to be one of the most epic seasons yet.

Q3: Are the activities you're asking students to practice, building effective movement patterns and confidence? Are there any habits or teaching choices you might want to adjust?

One of the biggest progression moments in women's snowboarding came in 1998, when Tina Basich became the first woman to land a backside 720 in competition at the Winter X Games. At the time, this trick had never been done in a women's event—and it immediately changed expectations for what was possible, opening the door for the level of riding we see today. Basich was also among the first women to have her own pro-model snowboard, helping push the industry to recognize and invest in women athletes.
